1) Purpose of a graduate school admission interview

One of the most critical stages of the graduate school application process is the interview. Admissions officers interview many candidates to see whether they are suitable for a position within their program. You can think of a grad school interview in a similar way to think about a professional job interview.

Overall they want to evaluate:

- How you articulate and express your opinions
- Your potential success in graduate school and the future
- Whether you possess the qualities that you've put in your application
